Happy 100th birthday, BirdLife!
The International Council for Bird Preservation (ICBP) – now BirdLife International – was founded on 20 June 1922. The initial concerns of the founders emerged from the unregulated and unsustainable killing of migratory birds, which have remained central to the work of the BirdLife partnership till today. Read the story of BirdLife's first 100 years here. The full year celebration of this historic milestone will culminate in the BirdLife100 World Congress between 11-16 September 2022. For more information visit the event's homepage.

Research & Publications
New publications on the Flight for Survival website
An extended and updated version of BirdLife International’s compilation for IKB monitoring methods, titled “A best practice guide for monitoring illegal killing and taking of birds” is available online.
In the frame of the LIFE Against Bird Crime project, BirdLife Europe produced a recommendation report for the development of an EU-level bird crime database, which has been also uploaded to the website.
Why do migratory birds decline?

Migratory birds are declining globally because of the way that humans have modified the landscape over recent decades – according to new research, which was based also on the PECBMS data. It reveals important connections between human infrastructure, population densities, hunting levels and bird population declines. The team also created the first-ever large-scale map of hunting pressure across the region. Read more here.

Romanian Parliament approves controversial changes to the hunting law

On 25 May 2022, the Romanian Parliament adopted new amendments to the hunting law that allow the hunting of larks, quails, turtle doves and other migratory birds without any scientific foundation. The bill abandons the previous system of annual national quotas for the quarry species and replaces it with a maximum number of allowed bag per day for each hunter and further relaxes the acquisition of a hunting permit. BirdLife Malta’s IKB news

Several interesting news have been reported from BirdLife Malta. For details, please read their latest newsletter. The information relevant for IKB include a poacher who was found guilty of illegally trapping finches on an unregistered trapping site and was fined €1,200+suspension of trapping license. A hunter was pleaded guilty to shooting and killing Turtle-doves during spring of 2021 when the season was opened only for quail hunting. He was also fined for €1,200 and received a hunting licence suspension for two years. A €6,000 fine and a two-year taxidermy suspension were sentenced to a taxidermist and hunting tour-organiser after over 700 protected bird carcasses were intercepted at the person’s premises.

IKB in Slovenia: what is going on?
Slovenia is not exactly notorious as a hotspot for bird poaching, yet countless birds are illegally hunted, kept and smuggled here, too. Tjaša Zagoršek from the Slovenian partner organization DOPPS reports in the EuroNatur magazine about her experiences in the fight against IKB (in German) in this article.

Six people arrested in Castilla-La Mancha for poisoning raptors
The successful police investigation running since late February resulted in the arrest of five hunters and a warden for poisoning 3 imperial eagles and 2 red kites in Villalgordo del Marquesado with a substance that's been prohibited for 15 years. Read more (in Spanish).
White-tailed Eagle shot dead in Denmark

In early May, a local farmer found a dead White-tailed Eagle on his property. He informed the Danish Nature Agency via the Danish Ornithological Society, which reported the death to the police. The autopsy showed that the bird was killed by a shotgun. The shot was retrieved from the carcass to aid further police investigation.
